

BREC's 2023 Get Golf Ready Clinics

Jack Terry, BREC's resident PGA Teaching Pro, will be conducting golf clinics and on-course training beginning in February and running through June to get you golf ready. The clinics and on-course training will be divided according to ability levels. They are open to all, 14 years and older.

When registering for a given clinic, it is best to determine your ability level first. That way you register for the correct session that will help you most learn and play golf the best. Here are the four levels that will help you decide which clinics to sign up for:

- Beginner Level. This is for golfers who are in their initial stages of taking up the game. You may or may not have gotten any instructions, but you are very new to the game and are still trying to figure out what the golf swing does to get the ball up into the air and with any distance. You may have gone on to the golf course and tried playing, but it is all bit too daunting. Or perhaps you have taken the game up, been to the driving range several times, even gone out and played a few rounds, yet still aren't quite picking the game up to the point where you make significant progress. That still qualifies you as a beginner. Sign up for the beginner clinics and training.
- Want to Break 100. This is for golfers who have taken up the game and generally can swing and hit shots into the air... maybe not real far... but you are advancing it. Your putting and chipping are between okay and suspect; you definitely feel you need more work at this. You find the water and sand bunkers a lot, and most of your shots go sideways. But sometimes you have a good hole and occasionally make good shots, but only occasionally. If your score is typically between 105 to 120, you need to sign up for this clinic and training.
- Want to Break 90. You may have been at this for a while, you can get decent distance and for the most part have a sound putting and chipping game, but getting to the point where you can eliminate really bad holes is elusive to you. You may practice a good deal, but progress is slow and tedious, if any at all. If you have a bad round you will flair up and shoot in the 100s, or you might have a good round going with a couple of pars (and occasional birdies), still you blow the round with a handful of bad holes, then this clinic and training are for you.
- Want to Break 80. This is for the serious golfer who has broken through and shot in the 70s before, but can't seem to do it consistently. You hit quality shots, putt and chip fairly well, and work hard at your game on the practice tee, but seem stuck on bogey golf. You just don't seem to get the distance you need, nor the consistency... you have tried everything, but still can't seem to break the barrier of shooting in the 70s regularly. Need to sign up for this one.

Is it a good idea to sign up for all the Clinics/On Course you can, one right after another? No, that is not a good idea. Reason being is that the learning process involves trial and error (or better, cause and effect), and the golfer needs to comprehend how they learn. A handout is given to each participant that covers Pre-clinic, the clinic event, post clinic, then the on-course session, and then the post on-course session. A player will need to space out their development into at the very least three to four week periods.

Which then leads to this, when you sign up for a clinic, you need to realize you are signing up for a two-segment session. In other words, you sign up for a clinic, then follow the hand-out for the following week, and then you will go on to the golf course for training. In other words, you sign up for a clinic, and then exactly one week later you go on to the golf course. So you are committing to a clinic and on-course training, therefore, make sure your personal schedule allows for this. Again, you have to take both. Sorry, no signing up for a clinic and not the on-course, or vice versa.

The reason we follow this format is because the game is extremely difficult to play because it is difficult to learn. Merely taking a clinic won't be the magic solution, or trying to take a whole series of clinics in succession... the process involves learning if you are going to pick this game up and play at a better level. Sorry to say, there is no fast track to learning golf. Thus, take the clinic, follow the instructions in the hand-out, and attend the on-course training one week later.

This particularly applies to Beginners, Break 100 and 90 players; breaking 80 involves another process. Want more details on that, contact Jack Terry. We know we are asking for a strong level of commitment, for your time, but we are also acting in your best interest. If you commit to the time elements in your development, you will improve at almost a 20%-25% level compared to other ways. For a golfer shooting 120 all the time might find they can break 100 regularly; do the math for breaking 90 and 80... and for Beginners too. Makes sense if you want to get better at this.

Clinic sizes and duration: We keep each clinic limited to 3 participants at a time. Therefore, we anticipate these sessions will fill up super quick. And each clinic session is an hour and half; for breaking 80 you will be working for 2 hours. These sessions are fairly intense, a lot of learning; the Pre-clinic and clinic event hand-out will prepare you for this.

On-Course training: Following your clinic, exactly one week later you will be taken on to the golf course. You will have a hand out that will be preparing you for this, so no need to be intimidated. The process of learning will expand for you when you are taken on to the golf course following a learning session; don't fret though, we make it enjoyable for you even though it involves learning that will at times be difficult. You will basically play a round of golf guided and coached by the same instructor at the clinic. It will be a 9 hole adventure with some review after; a total of 2 ½ hours. For the breaking 80 crowd, there won't be an on-course session, but instead will be periodic "tournaments". To learn more about that contact Jack Terry.

How to register:

- 1.) Determine which clinic and subsequent on-course session you wish to take. Each Clinic + On Course is coded.
- 2.) Contact Jack Terry via email at jterry@brec.org with your request – using the code.
- 3.) If you want to also schedule an additional clinic, submit a second request in an email to Jack Terry as well. Due to demand, no more than two clinic/on-course at a time.
- 4.) First to contact get the given date.
- 5.) Ask to be put on "Quick contact list"; if someone cancels we can contact you to join.

Payment and Fees:

- 1.) No pre-payment is required; but, if you visit any BREC golf course ahead of time to purchase a BREC Gift Card to pay for the sessions, you receive a 10% discount for any session you attend. Not to mention, a gift card for lessons is a great gift.
- 2.) Payments for clinic or for on-course training are paid the day of the session at the respective golf facility where the session is being held. Your name will be given to the Pro Shop staff who will accept your payment.
- 3.) Clinics + On Course Fee
 - General Public: $25 for the clinic + $25 for on-course training: Total $50
 - Seniors (59 and older): $20 for the clinic + $20 for on-course training: Total $40

- 10 % discount if paid by BREC Gift Card

4.) Four days before your sessions, you will be sent a reminder; be sure to respond back.
